

Sami Derbel

If I had the power to change anything in my life it would be to stay in Massachusetts where I lived for 6 years. Moving to California had a great impact on me.

I cherished all the fun times with my friends and all the winter sports we played. I also appreciated when my grandpa and my aunt came to visit me in Massachusetts. My school even made me a good bye party which was very exciting.

When I moved I lost my best friends with whom I had so many good times. I used to go to my friend's house and we would play on his game cube. One of my friends had a tree house. We used to have sleepovers in the weekends. On Fridays I used to go with my friend to his house, we would play together for the whole afternoon, and then go to the ice ring and skate in the evening.

When I came to California I had to make new friends, which was difficult. It took me so long to make close friends. I also had to go to a new school. Being "the new student" was not fun at all.

Another problem that had to do with moving was the weather. In Massachusetts, it was cold and warm and it snows. Winter was a lot of fun. My parents used to take me and my brother sledding. Once we got home we would drink a cup of hot chocolate to warm up. But in California we have only hot and warm weather with no snow.

One more issue is that we owned a big house in Massachusetts with a backyard. We had a lot of space to take pleasure in. When I invited my friends over to play or for a sleep-over, there were a lot of things to do inside. But in California I live in an apartment. I have to go out to play because there is no room in the apartment and also because my parents don't want me to disturb our neighbors with the noise.

In conclusion moving had made my life hard and unpleasant for a while. And I wish I never moved from Massachusetts.